A NOVEL.

BY GEORGE WATTERSTON, Esq.
OF WASHINGTON CITY,
Author of the Lawyer and Child of Feeling.

The celebrity of this author's "LAWYER," and "CHILD OF FEELING" induced the publishers to engage in this work, and without detracting from the merits of the former, feel themselves justified in stating that his GLENCARN is superior to either. It is submitted without further recommendation, with a wish, that the American reviewers may give further encouragement to this young gentleman's endeavors to entertain instruct and moralize his fellow citizens, in a way seemingly well calculated to attract their attention.

From the Virginia Patriot.

Coercing the Belligerents.—An additional proof—if indeed an additional proof can at this time of day be wanting—of the consummate folly of our democratic administration in attempting to coerce the belligerents by their famous embargo, may be found in the speech of the English chancellor of exchequer, published in our columns of today. He states in the most positive manner, that notwithstanding all the restrictions attempted to be imposed upon her commerce, by French decrees and American statutes, the actual exports, foreign and domestic, of Great Britain during the last year, exceeded in amount those of any former year of war by ten millions, and even those of any of the most prosperous years of peace by seven millions.

And yet it is but a few months since we were told; and told too with an air of the most supercilious self-complacence; by the democratic organs through the country; that our embargo was working wonders towards the downfall of that nation; that between this regulation and the decrees of Napoleon, every outlet for her exports was closed; that her manufactories were ruined and her citizens in a state of starvation and insurrection. Many an honest man and patriotic citizen was imposed upon by these representations, and though he felt the almost insufferable pressure of the measure upon himself, bore it with the firmness becoming a good subject, because he was taught to believe that it would work the ruin of our foes.

At last comes the truth of the case: and the honest farmer, merchant and mechanic, then finds, that while the embargo (according to an estimate made upon the floor of Congress,) has cost his country more than twenty millions sterling; the first lord of the treasury in that country which the embargo was principally designed to injure, makes his official boast, that in the single article of exports, his country is the richer for that measure by ten millions.

Will such facts as these, which are daily increasing both in number and importance, never convince the people how grossly they have been and continue to be imposed upon? Has the slumber of American patriotism become eternal: will nothing arouse our citizens to a sense of their shame and of their danger; and are we so fatally enamored with the name of liberty, that we have ceased to be solicitous about the substance? Are we already ripe for the rule of OUR KING NAPOLEON? If we are, in God's name let us submit to it at once, that we may know the full extent of our misery: but if we are not, it is high time for us to open our eyes and look about us.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Register's Office, April, 3, 1810.
JOSEPH NOURSE, REGISTER.

From the Spirit of 'Seventy-Six.

Washington, March 15th, 1810.

DEAR SIR,

Your favor of the 18th of February has but just reached me. I recollect well, very well, the indignation I felt at the conduct of those who were in 1797 burying us into an unnecessary war on the side of the then most powerful nation on earth, who, if there was then any danger of the dominion of one power over the rest of the world, it was of that power. I remember well my feelings and fears on the subject of unnecessary expences and an encrease of public debt—I have the self same feelings at present. I am ten times more alarmed on account of the danger of France, under her tyrant, overrunning our liberties and the liberties of the world, than I was then, at the danger from England. When I exerted my utmost to turn John Adams and his friends out of power, I little thought I should have the same complaints to make against those I helped in; I less expected that I should have to exert myself to hold them back from plunging into a war more useless to our country and more dangerous to the liberties of the world, than that John Adams was for waging; I little thought I should have to complain of loans to encrease the public debt, of grants of legislative powers to the executive—of executive encroachments—of the curtailing of the liberty of speech on the floor of congress—of extra constitutional armies—of political persecution and proscription—of common law prosecutions for libels on the principle of, the greater the truth, the greater the libel. No—I fondly hoped that my republican friends would, after correcting federal errors and abuses in the government, shew themselves friends of peace, of economy, and of the constitution; that they would be the kind rulers and fathers of the whole nation, dealing out justice and favors equally to all classes, and not the heads of a party and fomentors of party distinctions. I had complained of the persecutions of the federal party, or their turning out of office and proscriptions; it was the farthest from my wishes that my friends should be guilty of the same folly and error. I never advised the turning out of any man, save one, whom the federal party, had they kept in power, would have discarded. When my friends commenced their proscriptions, and refused the services of good men because they were not of their party, my soul sickened—my affections began to alienate from them—My zeal in turning out the federal party was justified by my ambition to shew the world how much more honest, wise and patriotic, republicans were, than they. But when I saw my friends passing laws repugnant to the principles of right, of common sense, and of the constitution; trampling on the rights of our fellow men, and assuming the powers and prerogatives of the judiciary, as in the case of the bill for the temporary government of Louisiana, and in the laws for driving people by military force, from the lands they claim, and that without a constitutional trial shewing who had the right to the property they possessed.—— When I saw myself persecuted for the freedom with which I spoke my mind on these subjects, I began to think that we had turned out one set of men, to make room for those who were little better. Subsequent events have tended to make me think that partyism is inconsistent with patriotism. I see now all love of country is lost in excessive cares for the interest of a party. I frequently overheard men, called republicans, crying out, if this is done and that is not done, our party will be ruined. Washington witnesses caucus after caucus, held for the express purpose of concentrating the views and efforts of individuals, planning and agreeing upon the course to be pursued to save the credit or support the projects of the party; where the interests of the nation are not so much as spoken of. In answer to one of the questions you have put to me, I know of but little, if any good, congress are doing, by continuing their session. To another I say, I can see no benefit from the rejection of the treaty made by Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney.—It might have saved us, if it had been agreed to, from the embargo, which has been a curse to the nation since it was tho't of. I know of no good to be expected from the quarrel between our secretary of state and Mr. Jackson. I see what I call a dangerous predeliction in favor of Bonaparte; and an unjustifiable zeal to keep open and wide the breach with England on the part of my old friends, the republicans. I am in daily fear of the arrival of a treaty from France, which will be rushed into, making promises on our part, which will be adhered to; and stipulations on his part, that will be mere deceptions; he has disregarded and trampled on his former treaty with us; notwithstanding we have continued a minister at his court for no other purpose than to supplicate his mercy, and to beg favor of him. Had he abided by the stipulations of that treaty, this nation would have been an hundred million richer: we should have heard of none of his sequestrations; of his creatures burning and ransoming American ships; of his imprisoning and starving American seamen, and forcing them into his ships: we should have heard nothing of the British countervailing orders to his arbitrary decrees: we should have heard nothing of our self destroying embargo; there would have been no pretext for it; I wish for no treaty with such a monster.

It is long since the commercial stipulations of Jay's treaty have expired, and since our government refused to revive them. British depredations, however unjust, have not had the aggravation of being committed in direct violation of a recent treaty. You ask me why was not the treaty made by Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney received and adopted? I need not repeat Mr. Jefferson's reasons, which were not satisfactory to me. That treaty was made by men as good and as wise, as well acquainted with the rights and interests of both nations, as any in the nation; men under Mr. Jefferson's own orders, guided by his own instructions, men of his own selection, yet it was by him rejected without his deigning to consult the senate, that council which the constitution has given him. This was an exhibition of executive prerogative and display of power which would have provoked republican vengeance had either of his predecessors been the persons who presumed to have so conducted. Not more than ten days before the arrival of this treaty, Mr. Jefferson told me that our ministers at London had agreed with the British ministers on all the essential part and points of a treaty, which would reconcile all the jarring interests of the two nations. How thunderstruck was I when I heard that the treaty was to be sent back, because a note accompanied it, telling us the expectations of that government with regard to our conduct with France, and because the British government had not yielded to us their claim to search our merchant vessels for their seamen, and made a formal disavowal of a practice the government had never sanctioned, that of pressing American seamen. I was ill prepared to approve Mr. Jefferson's conduct in this business, having had his own word but a few days before, that the points and principles were satisfactorily settled, which were to form the basis of the treaty I wished to see concluded, which was to bury all animosities. I was the more displeased with this conduct when I found that Messrs. Monroe and Pinkney had been authorised to enter into an informal arrangement and that they had done so in respect to the seamen. As to the accompanying note, our ratification might have been accompanied with a note expressing the understanding of our government on the subject of that note; in this way its operation might have been obviated.

It must, I believe on all hands be acknowledged, that Bonaparte and the French with not more than one sixth part of the power to do harm to the American people, their property and commerce, that Britain has, and though bound by a solemn treaty to respect our rights and property, have for four years past done us three times the injury Britain has with whom we have no treaty, nor do there exist with her those reciprocal stipulations with respect to commerce, which are common between nations. Yet the curses and execrations of my old friends are all reserved for Britain, none can be spared for France.

As to myself, my dear sir, I am well convinced I was not made for a party man although the time was when the world thought otherwise. I never possessed the versatility necessary for a demagogue, nor the spaniel feelings of an humble follower—— Having fixed on principles I consider myself bound by them. The same principles govern me now that did in 1797—8—9 and 1800. Yet I see myself and those principles deserted by most of the men with whom I acted at that time, and I am reviled because I will not follow the versatile leaders of the party regardless of my principles, which are rigidly republican, and never jacobinic or mobocratic. I have from my infancy seen the necessity of government and my political life has in all cases evinced my attachment to government—— Much as I disliked John Adam's administration, I avowed at that time I would support government under it——I gave unequivocal evidence of the truth of this avowal, when I lay quietly in jail, for the destruction of which nothing but my consent was wanting; while thousands were offering to break the jail at every hazard, urging for my consent. My greatest cares were directed to keeping the tumultuous passions of men, who felt for my wrongs, within due bounds. Though I suffered for what all the democrats said was no crime, and for writing what an honest federalist on the floor of congress last summer declared, was a virtuous candid declaration of principles, which ought to be sworn to by every member of congress when he takes his seat. I could not for a moment think of owing my liberty to an act which might endanger the existence of the government. Although I have always been in the habit of finding fault with what I did not like, I never would join any party in declaiming against what I did like. In the case of Jay's treaty I said, that considering what we had to give, what we received by it, was as much as we could expect, although it made concessions which I did not like. Had I been in congress at that time, I should have voted the appropriations. I will finish this letter which has already been spun out beyond my intention, with my opinion on the Adams's and Russian mission. I see no national benefit in a mission to Russia. We have nothing to do with their politics. Our imports from thence are of articles we have the means of producing; and if we were obliged for a few years to do so, after that we could furnish them as cheap as Russia. But John Adams, who had during a long life, enjoyed the benefit of living in high stile on the emoluments of public office, and calculated that his son Quincy should inherit after him, finding that the exclusive republicans had approached fast to that machiveliauism, to those detestable principles which characterize his public writings, particularly his defence of the constitution of the U. States, and finding that his service would be well received and rewardeed by the men in power, who were much in want of help to get out of the mire—knowing also that his son Quincey by his sycophancies had made some "snail pace" advances into favor, he concluded that he would aid them, if they would pay well. A foreign mission seemed as it were natural to the family; the favor after the second attempt to force it on the Senate, was granted, after that very same senate had declared they saw no necessity for the embassy. I will not say that the administration was taken in by the Adamses, out if any honest republican supposes the Adamses have changed their principles, that republican is taken in. I do them, the Adamses, the justice to say, they have adhered to their principles; I pride myself and congratulate them on our severally having adhered to the principles we possed thirteen years ago.—As far as I have seen John Adams's late writings, he has not retracted one syllable of his political errors; the same doctrine of "passive obedience and non resistance" to the powers that be, may be seen running through the whole of his old and new writings. His favorite project of a hereditary executive and hereditary nobility is no where, that I have seen abandoned. As for Quincey's famous letter abusing his colleague, I can see nothing in it which republicans, even embargo men, are beholden to him for—Not a syllable in favor of a durable embargo; but there is a great deal in that fashionable cant in which the president and his secretaries are considered synonomous with the government of the nation, as well as of the fulsome doctrine of passive obedience and non resistance. Before the Adamses could be truly entitled to the favor and full confidence of men of real republican principles, it behoved both parties to shew to the world that those detestable principles tending to monarchy, that attachment to the form of the corrupt government of England, 'the most stupendous fabric of human invention,'* were relinguished and given up by father and son.

I must lay by your letter and postpone answering your other questions, until leisure will admit of my devoting a little more time to the subjects to which they relate.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
M. LYON.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, April 12.

[Taken for the Alexandria Gazette.]

Mr. Quincy offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That the house of representatives are deeply sensible of the loss this nation has sustained in the death of that distguished officer, Gen. Wm. Washington, late a lieutenant colonel in the revolutionary army: and the rejection of the resolution offered on the 11th instant, having been produced wholly by considerations of a general nature, cannot derogate from that high sense the members of this house entertain in general with their fellow citizens, of the civil and military virtues and services of that officer.

Mr. Root reported a bill to appoint the time for the next meeting of congress—Made the order of the day for Monday next.

Mr. Fisk offered a resolution to erect a tombstone over the grave of the late Hon. Ezra Darby, formerly a member of this house. Laid on the table.

The house resolved itself into a committee of the whole—Mr. Macon in the chair, on the bill providing for the sale of public lands in the Louisiana territory and for other purposes.

The committee reported the bill to the house with amendments. The house concurred, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow.

The house went into committee of the whole on the bill to continue in force for the term of twenty years, the charter of the bank of the United States——Mr. Macon in the chair.

Mr. Love moved to strike out the first section of the bill, and spoke in favor of his motion.

☞ A Horse-stealer.

A travelling man with four or five horses for sale, (which were driven by a mulatto man rather elderly looking, and a short round made fellow) sold a chunky made black poney for forty four dollars, during a rainy ride from the falls bridge to the red house tavern, in Fairfax county, on the 19th March, to Aaron Miller, of said county; which horse had been some days before taken from a waggon at Cameron, but was pursued and recovered from the thief who deluded the warrant and got off. He said his name was Oben Johnson, from Elk Run. appeared to be about 25 years of age, well looking, with very red hair and whiskers and was well dressed; he said he had been selling horses in George Town and was going to Leesburg—he had a mule and two white matched grey horses in the drove. He also sold or exchanged a loose thick overcoat; which appears since to have been taken from Crawford's tavern shortly before the 19th. If any person can discover or trace either of the above named dealers, thereby leading to an exposure of them, by calling on or by writing to Mr. Snowden, the Printer of the Alexandria paper, shall receive Ten Dollars reward therefor.—He took the Centreville road from Wren's tavern.

Two Hundred Dollars Reward.

Run away from the subscriber, living at Albion, King George county, Virginia, on the 23d ultimo,

A BRIGHT mulatto man, named GRIFFIN, sometimes calls himself GRIFFIN BARLING, about 28 years of age, 5 feet 6 or 8 inches high, well, though not very stout made, a very light mulatto, grey eyes, dark hair and whiskers neatly cut, being an excellant barber and accustomed as a waiter all his life, when spoken to abruptly is much addicted to stuttering—had on when he eloped, a blue round jacket with red cape and pantaloons of cloth, Suwarrow boots, white hat, and black handkerchief about his neck—it is probable he will change his dress as he has a variety of good clothing with him. Having gone off without any provocation, I have some reason to believe this fellow is making his way to Baltimore or Philadelphia, with an expectation of imposing himself as a freeman. If he is secured in jail so that I get him again, out of the state of Virginia or Maryland, or the district of Columbia, I will give Two Hundred Dollars; if otherwise secured so that I get him again, One Hundred Dollars.
